

Good news: A summer of harmony

rounded up and the boys began practicing several times a week.

They played a few social engagements, including a successful concert at the Island Swim Club, before concluding their "season" last night at Willowbrook.

"The boys practiced hard and did a good job, even though they knew it was just a temporary thing," said Jeff's mother, Esther, obviously proud that the boys had done something constructive and put their summer to good use.

Two dozen Island students concluded a summer of musical accomplishment last night by presenting a concert for the residents of Willowbrook State School.

The ambitious youths, ranging in age from 12 to 18, are all attending Staten Island junior high or high schools and will return to their respective school bands now that the summer is over.

The impromptu concert group grew out of the efforts of two Castleton Corners student musicians, Jeff Envid and Gary Hansen. When school ended last June, they decided the best way to keep in practice until the fall was to play.

Neighborhood students who are also musicians were
