Several hundred New Dorp residents in the audience, including members of the New Dorp Central Civic Association, shouted, booted, stood on chairs and disrupted the meeting at least three times to show their disapproval of the proposal while board members attempted to discuss it.

Residents demanded a public hearing before any vote be taken. Bowing to community opposition, the board decided to postpone a vote until after a public hearing. Board chairman Raymond Watson told the crowd the date of the hearing will be announced.

Some vociferous residents shouted they wanted to "know now" and demanded a hearing date immediately.

Mrs. Carelli, whose committee reviews the proposal and presents a recommendation to the full board, was shouted down several times as she attempted to read her committee report.

While the mental health committee, she said, supports Richboro's attempt to open a drug-free counseling center to service the South Shore, it does not make any recommendation on the site for the center. "That is not within our committee to decide," she said.

The resolution cited the lack of any drug-counseling programs serving the South Shore and noted the "alarming increase" reported in the use of drugs among school children.

"That's not true," shouted someone in the audience, as residents interrupted and demanded to know what statistics had been used when the committee was drafting the resolution.

Michael Primiano, president of the New Dorp Central Civic Association, who is also a community board member, said New Dorp residents "were so upset" over the Richboro proposal that they are planning to organize a mass rally next month.

Richboro hopes to provide an estimated 120 clients a week with drug-free counseling services. Under the proposal, outpatients would receive a minimum of three hours per week of counseling at the center, with day care clients receiving 10 hours per week. The program would be aimed primarily at pre-teen and high school students and would receive most of its funding from the federal National Institute for Drug Abuse.

Although the New Dorp RAP Center building is the favored site for the center, the owner of the building has said he will not rent the space to Richboro, which would force Richboro to select another possible South Shore site for the center.
