

Enthusiasm the byword at Island's Special Olympics

By JULIA I. MARTIN

Non-stop enthusiasm morning and afternoon was the tie that bound the spirits of volunteers, chaperones, guests and participants totalling a thousand yesterday at the 1982 area games co-hosted by the Staten Island Special Olympics and the Staten Island Developmental Center in Willowbrook.

The more than 500 handicapped athletes who convened for the event at the developmental center ranged in age from 8 to 80, and all were celebrities sporting a blue-and-gold participation medal on a red-white-and-blue ribbon hung around their necks Olympic-style.

According to Richard Salinardi, coordinator of Special Olympics, the special athletes in yesterday's events consisted of close to 400 who reside throughout Staten Island in their own private homes or in foster care accommodations; nearly 100 from the developmental center, and United Cerebral Palsy contingents totalling about 75 clients from Brooklyn, Manhattan and Queens.

And after the program of tailor-made events ended at 4 p.m., many of them also wore additional medals — gold (first place), silver (second) and bronze (third), according to their achievements.

"The story of this day is the community — the way the people turn out in force for our games," said Salinardi. The Eltingville resident, along with Elin M. Howe, former director of the developmental center, inaugurated the idea of competition without regard to skill level for special olympians three years ago.

Also serving as host, along with the Staten Island Special Olympics and the developmental center, was the Joseph P. Kennedy Jr. Foundation as co-sponsor.

The cameras of proud parents and other relatives and friends were busy clicking away during events in three categories: ambulatory, wheelchair, and severe and profound. They included softball throw, frisbee, track, field and wheelchair events on the center's grounds.

"They really worked harder than any other athletes we've ever seen. They're all winners," said Erika Shaver of Great Kills, one of a team of five 12-year-old girls who made their debut as cheerleaders yesterday under the sponsorship of Watkins-Kellett Post, American Legion.

Competitors and onlookers take in the events.

Erika said she and the rest of her team — Jill Teitler, Lydia Lorenzo, Merrie Geig and Sharon Malagraph — had been practicing a half dozen cheers and a victory song for the special athletes every Saturday afternoon since January in each others' houses.

For the morning and afternoon contests, beginning at 9:15 a. m., the team sported red-and-blue pompons and wore uniforms of white shorts and "Special Olympics" T-shirts. Said Sharon afterwards, "We would like to do it again next year. I think it's a good way to spend the day — to see that they're happy."

The storybook weather that marked the debut of May yesterday fostered zest for the games and hearty appetites for the lunch — 600 hamburgers and 600 sodas provided by McDonald's Family Restaurants on Forest and on Richmond Avenues.

Other community organizations donated their services throughout the day, while individuals and business enterprises provided a wide-ranging program of entertainment.

Among the many individual volunteers was Deborah Rosenberg, 18, of Great Kills, who said she's "basically interested in the special population, and considering special education as a career actually." In the morning, she had chaperoned participants, and in the afternoon had rooted for the special athletes to "keep going."

She explained, "Everything

Cal Leonard presents a gold medal to a winner in the softball throw.

S.I. Advance photos by Chris Johns

here is important — the chaperones, the volunteers who are cheering on, patting backs, shaking hands, and congratulating the participants to make them feel that what they did was totally accomplished. As much as it means to win, it's worthwhile that they finish the race itself."

A happy participant by the end of the afternoon was Debbie Ellis, 22, of Vanderbilt Ave., who wore three medals — a gold one for the broad jump, a silver medal for the race, and the participation medal.