

Camping trip saved by workers

A scout troop on a camping trip without tents was bad news until some Staten Island Developmental Center workers made it good news.

Handicapped scouts from Pack 115 were set for their first campout, in conjunction with the Special Olympics, until they arrived at their point of departure and discovered there were no tents available for them.

Cub master Ronnie Micciulla of Arrochar wrote that some workers from the developmental center came to the rescue, housing the troop in the center's gym and leading the pack in scouting and other recreational activities.

Micciulla writes, "Our special thanks to everyone, but most of all to Tom Tierney, Leon, Jim and a wonderful scout leader, Dee."
