

From largest Army hospital to infamous state 'school'

By LESLIE PALMA-SIMONCEK

ADVANCE STAFF WRITER

In 1938, a story written by a Staten Island Advance reporter who discovered that the state planned to build an institution for the mentally retarded tipped Islanders off to a plan they vehemently opposed. Civic groups battled against the plan, but the state Legislature went ahead and appropriated $5.1 million for the purchase of a site and construction of a new hospital in Willowbrook.

Mayor Fiorella LaGuardia supported the project and it was approved by the city's Board of Estimate. The city sold the Willowbrook site to the state on Feb. 3, 1938, and the legislature authorized expenditure of $6.8 million more for construction.

The name Willowbrook State School was approved on May 1, 1942, five months after the United States entered World War II.

But because of the war, the state had to turn over the brand new facility to the federal government for use as a hospital before it was ever used for its intended purpose.

It was renamed Halloran General Hospital in honor of the late Col. Paul Stacey Halloran, a medical corpsman. With more than 3,000 beds, Halloran was the largest Army hospital in the nation.

The end of the war brought a debate between the federal and state governments over the future of Halloran Hospital. In 1947, title to the hospital was transferred from the Army to Veteran's Administration to topically disabled children had topped 6,000, almost 2,000 more patients ago have been transferred to group homes, but about 1,100 remain in other institutions in the metropolitan area. All of them must be moved to group homes by 1991.

Much of what was Willowbrook State School — which was renamed the Staten Island Developmental Center during the controversy in the 70s — was transferred to the state Dormitory Authority last week.

That property will be used to house a consolidate campus for the College of Staten Island. The remainder will continue to provide services for the mentally handicapped.

to the hospital was transferred from the Army to Veteran's Administration to temporarily disabled children had topped 6,000, almost 2,000 more patients ago have been transferred to group homes, but about 1,100 remain in other institutions in the metropolitan area. All of them must be moved to group homes by 1991.

Much of what was Willowbrook State School — which was renamed the Staten Island Developmental Center during the controversy in the 70s — was transferred to the state Dormitory Authority last week.

That property will be used to house a consolidate campus for the College of Staten Island. The remainder will continue to provide services for the mentally handicapped.

tally retarded and developmentally disabled children had topped 6,000, almost 2,000 more patients ago have been transferred to group homes, but about 1,100 remain in other institutions in the metropolitan area. All of them must be moved to group homes by 1991.

Much of what was Willowbrook State School — which was renamed the Staten Island Developmental Center during the controversy in the 70s — was transferred to the state Dormitory Authority last week.

That property will be used to house a consolidate campus for the College of Staten Island. The remainder will continue to provide services for the mentally handicapped.

County legacy

Inhumane conditions at the institution came to light in 1971 in a series of articles written by Advance reporter Jane Kurtin. As a response, parents of children in the facility and the New York Civil Liberties Union brought a lawsuit that culminated with the trial of what was Willowbrook in 1975, a court-approved directive calling for the patients to be transferred out of the facility and into group homes.

Last week — 12 years later — the last patients left the facility.

Most who were clients a decade

tally retarded and developmentally disabled children had topped 6,000, almost 2,000 more patients ago have been transferred to group homes, but about 1,100 remain in other institutions in the metropolitan area. All of them must be moved to group homes by 1991.

Much of what was Willowbrook State School — which was renamed the Staten Island Developmental Center during the controversy in the 70s — was transferred to the state Dormitory Authority last week.

That property will be used to house a consolidate campus for the College of Staten Island. The remainder will continue to provide services for the mentally handicapped.

tally retarded and developmentally disabled children had topped 6,000, almost 2,000 more patients ago have been transferred to group homes, but about 1,100 remain in other institutions in the metropolitan area. All of them must be moved to group homes by 1991.

Much of what was Willowbrook State School — which was renamed the Staten Island Developmental Center during the controversy in the 70s — was transferred to the state Dormitory Authority last week.

That property will be used to house a consolidate campus for the College of Staten Island. The remainder will continue to provide services for the mentally handicapped.

tally retarded and developmentally disabled children had topped 6,000, almost 2,000 more patients ago have been transferred to group homes, but about 1,100 remain in other institutions in the metropolitan area. All of them must be moved to group homes by 1991.

Much of what was Willowbrook State School — which was renamed the Staten Island Developmental Center during the controversy in the 70s — was transferred to the state Dormitory Authority last week.

That property will be used to house a consolidate campus for the College of Staten Island. The remainder will continue to provide services for the mentally handicapped.

tally retarded and developmentally disabled children had topped 6,000, almost 2,000 more patients ago have been transferred to group homes, but about 1,100 remain in other institutions in the metropolitan area. All of them must be moved to group homes by 1991.

Much of what was Willowbrook State School — which was renamed the Staten Island Developmental Center during the controversy in the 70s — was transferred to the state Dormitory Authority last week.

That property will be used to house a consolidate campus for the College of Staten Island. The remainder will continue to provide services for the mentally handicapped.

tally retarded and developmentally disabled children had topped 6,000, almost 2,000 more patients ago have been transferred to group homes, but about 1,100 remain in other institutions in the metropolitan area. All of them must be moved to group homes by 1991.

Much of what was Willowbrook State School — which was renamed the Staten Island Developmental Center during the controversy in the 70s — was transferred to the state Dormitory Authority last week.

That property will be used to house a consolidate campus for the College of Staten Island. The remainder will continue to provide services for the mentally handicapped.

Face of 2
PAGES

Report conveyed wrong impression

On behalf of a group of parents of the Staten Island Divisions of the Association for the Help of Retarded Children, I am expressing their concern of a phase of your reporting of the Jenniefer Schweiger tragedy.

The trauma of this heinous crime impacted on all of us but the depth of the tragedy had a special impact of fear on the parents of the Developmentally Disabled. It has taken a long time to shake the fear of allowing our children to share the benefits of an "open society" and overlook unfounded bias.

There was a line of your reporting that cast a pall on the acceptance we seek — you identified the accused as "slightly retarded." This was without basis that and lent itself to the suspicion that retardation and criminality are synonymous. It was an unnecessary and unverified description.

Subsequent information has confirmed that the accused is fully competent — but you never corrected a description that was not genuine.

HERMAN FISHMAN
Meiers Corner

[The writer is vice president/Staten Island for the New York chapter of the Association for the Help of Retarded Children.]