A Brooklyn man was found lying face up in Willowbrook Park yesterday morning, dead after an apparent heart attack.

The man, identified as Stanley Stone, was rushed to St. Vincent's Medical Center shortly after being found by police officers at 7:15 a.m.

Hospital workers performed cardiopulmonary resuscitation on the man for about half an hour, before pronouncing him dead at 8:03 a.m., police said.

Although police did not have an exact age for Stone, hospital officials believe he was about 45 years old, said Stephen Auger, a hospital spokesman.

Detectives from the Crimes Against Persons Squad are investigating the incident, although police and hospital officials believe the death was due to natural causes.
