

His hands manacled, Andre Rand is led from a police bus.

Aquino said he left Rand that night at the home of a West Brighton clergyman from whom Rand said he wanted to rent an apartment.

Two physicians testified about Down's syndrome and its complications.

Dr. Maria Colombi, a pediatrician-cardiologist, testified she had treated Jennifer in September 1985 at Deborah Hospital in Brown Mills, N.J., which specializes in cardiology and treating pulmonary disease.

She diagnosed Jennifer as having a heart defect, a genetic dysfunction common in persons with Down's syndrome. She found that Jennifer was not a suitable candidate for corrective surgery.

Dr. Colombi said Jennifer had a life expectancy of 10 to 20 years, about one half of the average life expectancy of persons with Down's syndrome.

Dr. Joseph French, an expert on Down's syndrome, said one of the characteristics of the disability is that such persons have a trusting nature that is "out of proportion" to other persons.

The trial will resume Tuesday.
