

Staten Island Advance

Lifestyle.

“The program has the flexibility to stay dynamic and innovative in order to be responsive to the changing needs of the participants.”

— Maureen Brennick,
director of family support services for A Very Special Place.

ADVANCE PHOTO/MIKE FALCO

Quilting is one of the more popular workshops among senior clients of A Very Special Place.

ADVANCE PHOTO/IRVING SILVERSTEIN

Shift supervisor Adrienne McMichael, second from left, and recreation specialist Laura Chidwick, second from right, work on crafts with clients Fred, George and Gilbert.

Page 1 of 4

A Very Special Place has helped hundreds of developmentally disabled Island adults in its first 20 years

By ROLLANDA COWLES
ADVANCE STAFF WRITER

“We don't go to Atlantic City, so we bring the casinos here,” joked Alan Roff, program director at the Senior Care and Activity Center of A Very Special Place Inc., as he described some of the activities available at the center for developmentally disabled adults.

What is even more interesting to observers of the Ocean Breeze activity center, which is designed to meet the leisure needs of senior citizens with developmental disabilities, is that the center is but one of a myriad of services introduced by A Very Special Place for its Staten Island clientele over the past 20 years.

The agency offers an extensive menu of offerings to developmentally disabled adults, helping them to enjoy their lives and gain employment wherever possible.

At the senior activity center, clients enjoy courses in dance, exercise, board and card games, crafts, gardening, cooking and music appreciation.

“Consumer choices, as well as further development of their leadership potential, is encouraged in the senior program,” said Maureen Brennick, director of the agency's family support services. “The program has the flexibility to stay dynamic and innovative in order to be responsive to the changing needs of the participants,” said Ms. Brennick. Currently there are about 60 in the program.

Now based in Dongan Hills, A Very Special Place will mark its 20th anniversary with a luncheon next Wednesday at noon in the Monte Bianco, Grant City.

The agency is dedicating its celebration to “the special blend of consumers, families, staff and friends who for more than two decades have inspired the caring atmosphere and quality services that improve and enhance the lives of the people who utilize them.”

Currently, close to 900 individuals participate in the agency's programs.

In addition to the Senior Care and Activity Center, the service menu offered by a Very Special Place includes the New Dorp Day Treatment Center, the Great Kills Day Treatment Center, the Community Center, also in Ocean Breeze, residential services in the Benton Residence in Dongan Hills and the Hylan Residence in Grasmere, in addition to supported community residences for seven individuals.

Not to be overlooked are the agency's outreach services, including case management and individual and family support services for 100 people.

A Very Special Place was founded in 1974 by a handful of people who wanted to provide an alternative and more comprehensive source of programs and services for Staten Island adults with developmental disabilities.

All of the founders are still on the staff or serving on the agency's board of directors, according to Elaine Auerbach, director of development.

Among the pioneers are former Willowbrook State School employees Genevieve R. Benoit, now executive director of A Very Special Place, and Diane M. Buglioli, associate executive director, in addition to board member Susan Montella. The current board president is Sonia Braniff.

Until 1980, the organization acted as an advocacy and referral service through its membership in the Staten Island Regional Board on Retardation and Disabilities Council.

In April of that year, A Very Special Place opened its first day treatment center, with 12 clients at the New Dorp site.

In the ensuing years, the agency continued to meet the changing needs of people with developmental disabilities, noted Ms. Buglioli.

The agency's two day-treatment centers provide clinical and therapeutic services to more than 100 adults.

Both the New Dorp and Great Kills centers offer evaluation, pre-vocational training in work skills, and rehabilitative skills in self care, dressing for work, community awareness and leisure skills to people over the age of 21 who are developmentally disabled.

In the pre-vocational training program, clients learn basic work skills needed to perform in a sheltered workshop setting, such as identifying numbers and sorting and assembling objects.

In the personal management program, clients are taught grooming skills and basic food preparation.

The centers also encourage as much recreational therapy as possible. The exercise bike is one of their most popular items. Cheery and friendly, clients reflect the general ambience of the center with a friendly greeting and a hearty handshake for visitors.

Medical, nursing, psychological and case management service are also available, according to Mrs. Auerbach.

A Very Special Place also sponsors a supported work program called “Employment Training Alternatives (ETA)” which provides individuals, age 18 and over, with a developmental or learning disability, the opportunity to receive vocational and job skill training needed to achieve competitive employment within the community.

(See SPECIAL, Page C 2)

Page 2 of 4

"An individual job coach remains on the job with the trainee until all duties are learned and performance is stabilized," Mrs. Auerbach explained.

Weekly vocational counseling, advocacy and referrals, in addition to a bi-weekly employment support group are also available for the program's 33 members.

Both the New Dorp and Great Kills Day Treatment Centers act as liaisons for their clientele and the TeleRide transportation service, which provides transportation for clients to places of employment, medical appointments and recreational events.

TeleRide operates seven days a week depending on participants' needs, providing more than 4,500 round trips each month to the 458 people using its service, according to Mrs. Auerbach.

The agency's community center is Ocean Breeze provides an evening and Saturday morning recreation program, featuring modular activities that include sports, exercise, dance, crafts, fine arts and adult education.

The goal of the program is to develop and enhance the socialization and leisure skills of developmentally disabled individuals over the age of 18.

According to Roff, in response requests from clients, the community center instituted several new programs this year, including a sign language course. In addition, bowlers will have the opportunity to participate in a summer league.

A community-based ceramics program is also available and some of its members are involved with activities in various Island housing centers.

Not all programs are center-oriented, however.

A Very Special Place provides a homelike environment for 24 individuals with developmental disabilities in two handsomely-appointed residences, where they can develop and improve skills in independent living, recreation and community involvement.

Benton Residence, in Dongan Hills, provides services to 10 adults with developmental disabilities, while Hylan Residence, in Grasmere, provides services for 12 older adults and senior citizens with developmental disabilities.

Residential and clinical staff provide training while medical, psychological and case management services are also in place.

In addition, supported community residences currently enable seven adults with developmental disabilities to live independently in a semi-supervised setting.

Evening and weekend habilitative services are directed at developing independent living skills in health and safety, nutrition, money management and household care while assisting in accessing recreation and community resources, like the Community Center.

The 20-year road to A Very Special Place services has been paved, according to Ms. Buglioli, by a "mixed bag" of resources, including direct state/city contracts, Medicaid, foundation grants and private donors.

"During the past 20 years, the agency has certainly grown in the number of individuals that we serve and the number of individuals that we employ, but even more important, our agency has grown in the number of Staten Islanders who are our agency's friends, neighbors and advocates," remarked Ms. Benoit, executive director.

* * *

Tickets for next Wednesday's luncheon are $45 per person. Reservations and additional information may be obtained by calling 987-1234.

Page 3 of 4

Clients of A Very Special Place participate in a dance class at the agency's Ocean Breeze community center.

ADVANCE PHOTO
ROB SOLLETT

Page 4 of 4