Historical Sketch

The State Charter Commission on Staten Island Secession was created in November 1990 after 81% of Staten Island voters approved a referendum to explore the possibility of a secession from New York City. Chaired by State Senator John Marchi, the Commission undertook an intensive 2-year study and public discussion of Staten Island secession, culminating in a favorable report to the governor and state legislature and a draft charter for an independent City of Staten Island. Paul E. Proske had served as chairman of the Staten Island Chamber of Commerce from 1978-1980, and served on the Staten Island Charter Commission. In the late 1980s, Proske undertook a detailed review of Staten Island's finances, and found that the borough would be able to sustain the transition from borough to independent city.
